

Note: I plan on workshopping title insha'Allah, probably something like "Cozy Crocheter's Sanctum." But here's the idea pitch:

## Project Summary: Cozy Crochet Pattern Hub

I want to build a calm, structured platform for free crochet patterns that removes the usual frustration of searching through blogs, ads, and inconsistent instructions.

The goal is to make patterns feel:

- easy to follow
- consistent
- distraction-free
- and a little bit warm, without being social or chat-based

Core Idea

Instead of linking people to messy blog posts, this platform:

1. takes free crochet patterns (with permission)
2. rewrites them into a clean, standardized format
3. and presents them in a way that's easy to actually **use while crocheting**

It's less like a blog, and more like a quiet, organized pattern library + tool.

Key Experience

The most important part is how users interact with patterns:

- Patterns are broken into clear, step-by-step instructions
- Users can check off each step as they go

The interface automatically:

1. moves them to the next step
2. keeps their place
3. reduces what's on screen to just what they need

There's a focus mode where:

1. only the current step is visible
2. previous and future steps are collapsed
3. the screen gently guides them forward

The idea is that users don't have to think about where they are—the system handles that.

Built-In Help (Without Clutter)

Instead of linking to videos everywhere:

1. Users can hover (or press and hold on mobile) on a stitch or term
2. A small visual or explanation appears instantly
3. Nothing opens unless they ask for it

This way, help is always there, but never in the way

Skill Tracking (Optional Learning Layer)

Users can:

1. add techniques (like “magic ring”) to a personal learning list
2. practice them separately with small exercises
3. mark them as “comfortable” when ready

If a pattern includes techniques they haven't learned, they get a gentle suggestion to review them first

This is a quiet, optional skill-building system—not a course or community

Personal, Not Social

There are accounts, but no public interaction:

Users can:

1. save patterns
2. track progress
3. keep private notes
4. see completed projects

There are:

1. no comments
2. no forums
3. no social pressure

Everything is user-to-pattern, not user-to-user

Tone & Feel

The platform should feel:

1. Calm
2. Warm
3. consistent
4. not overly energetic or robotic

Small touches like:

1. subtle encouragement when finishing a project
2. gentle guidance text

But nothing distracting or “loud.”

Smart Tutorial System

Instead of a long intro:

1. the platform teaches features as the user uses them
2. short tips appear only when needed
3. users can skip, and won't be shown the same thing repeatedly

Content Approach

1. Only free patterns, used with permission
2. All patterns are rewritten (not copied) for clarity and consistency
3. No personal blog content (stories, etc.)
4. Focus is purely on usable instructions

Overall Goal

Create something that feels like “a calm, reliable place where I can find a pattern and actually complete it without frustration.”

Not:

1. a social platform
2. not a content feed
3. not a video hub

But, a tool + library designed around the act of crocheting.
